

Boehly Center Experiential Course

Investing in Sports, Media and Entertainment

This course provides an in-depth exploration of the sports, media and entertainment industries, focusing on industry dynamics and investment strategies. Students will learn how investors generate returns through lectures by industry leaders, discussions with subject matter experts, and a hands-on group project where they will apply valuation techniques to develop an investment thesis on an asset in one of the three sectors.

The course will begin in Williamsburg with a Saturday lecture covering the background, business models, and valuation methods of the sports, media and entertainment industries. Students will then participate in virtual sessions with subject matter experts to guide their projects. A one-day field trip to visit leading entertainment companies in New York City during Spring Break will offer firsthand exposure to major players in these industries (students are responsible for travel costs- scholarship support available).

The course concludes with in-person presentations of student projects to a panel of industry experts. Designed to provide practical insights, this course prepares students to evaluate and analyze investment opportunities in sports, media and entertainment and provides exposure to an exciting field within finance. Enrollment is by application and requires advanced finance coursework or significant experience in the field.

Enrollment:

Enrollment is by application only and requires advanced finance coursework (ex. BUAD 323, 327, 329) or significant experience in the field (finance internship or demonstrated interest in sports, media, or entertainment industries). Please apply using the form on the Boehly Center website or the QR code on Page 5

NYC Trip:

The field trip to New York City will take place on Friday, March 14th. Students are responsible for their own travel costs (scholarship support is available).

Schedule (TBD)

I. Pre-Work

Materials for students to study will be provided on the first day of classes in a dedicated Blackboard site. Pre-work will include readings, podcast episodes and/or small assignments.

II. February 22nd, 10:00AM - 2:00PM

Ari Untracht, Senior Director at Eldridge Industries, will lead the day's session, offering valuable insights into the foundational elements and investment strategies within the sports, media and entertainment sectors. Lunch will be provided, followed by the formation of three project teams, with each team focusing on one specific area of sports, media and entertainment.

III. Virtual Discussion, three 1-hour Zoom Meetings

Each industry team will have one hour to lead a discussion with a subject matter expert in their respective field—sports, media or entertainment. While all teams will participate in each discussion, they will only be responsible for leading the hour focused on their assigned industry. The subject matter experts will provide insights and strategies to help shape the direction of the final projects.

IV. March 14th, NYC Trip, 9:00AM - 5:00PM

Students will visit Eldridge Industries offices in New York City and visit with various sports, media and entertainment professionals and/or organizations. These visits offer an unparalleled opportunity to meet with senior executives and engage in discussions about these dynamic industries prior to presenting their final projects.

V. March 29th, 10:00AM - 2:00PM EST

Students will present and defend an investment memo on a designated opportunity within their industry to a panel of expert judges, engaging in discussion and receiving feedback on their analysis and recommendation.
